OIL DOWN ON CAPTINA.

A Small Flow Struck in a Very Shallow Well There,

There is some oil excitement down at Captina. James Kinney, who was engaged to put down two or three shallow wells on the Welsh and other farms in that vicinity, struck oil in the first hole put down at a depth of only 102 feet. The supply is limited, the well only numping three or four barrols a day, but the excitement runs high, and it is the intention to shoot the well to see what results may follow. The farmers for miles around gather at the well even in the biting cold, and the fact that even the present quantity of oil was found confirms the general belief that there is oil in that vicinity, and the land owners will toosen their purse strings and make further investigations. The fact that a small quantity of oil was found soon got out around among oil men, and several of them were on hand yesterday to learn what they could and reportpreas to the Standard Oil Company. put down at a depth of only 102 feet. "South Before the War."

"South Before the War."

Of this production, to be seen at the Grand this evening, the Dayton News says: Probably the truest picture of southern life ever presented on the stage of any Dayton theater is that given by "South Before the War" that commenced a return engagement of three days at the Park matines yesterday. It is so realistic, in fact, that it is advised to be seen by all. It pictures the darkey as he truly was in the days before the war; in his sorrows, his joys, his daily toil, his contests for prizes, his love and merry-making. Through it all runs a story of deep, remantic interest. The whole is intensely picturesque and enjoyable, and enjoyable,
